

An Online Resource for Widows, Widowers and their Loved Ones

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Once, a wife/husband. Today, a widow/widower.

Widowed.ca helps ease the transition.

VANCOUVER, B.C. – June 22, 2011 – Losing a spouse/partner can be among the most painful experiences in one's life. It is a time of grief, loneliness, and fear.

Coping with the aftermath and finding support services can be overwhelming during such a highly emotional time. ...What to do regarding legal or financial matters? ...Where to receive bereavement support outside of family and friends? ...How best to address health and wellness issues? Widowed.ca has the answers.

Widowed.ca is a free online resource for widows, widowers and their loved ones and provides an easy way to connect to information and services which addresses their needs on a practical and emotional level. From quick answers and informative articles to forums, seminar and event notices, it's all conveniently located in one place at Widowed.ca including access to trusted resources and local services!

Widowed.ca was developed as a compassionate and caring response to financial advisor and site founder, Jennifer Black's personal and professional experiences with loss.

"I saw how much a friend and clients were affected by the loss of a spouse and realized that there was a number of things people were looking for in terms of support, but just didn't know where to start in finding solutions," says Black.

"I also saw how difficult it was for them to be focused or in control, especially when making decisions. Alone, and with emotions running high - the biggest fear they had was in making mistakes. Widowed.ca looks to alleviate many of their fears by providing guidance and support to help ease the transition to a new chapter in their lives."

"I was only fifty years old when my husband died and I didn't know where to go for information or support. While searching the internet I came across www.widowed.ca and loved all their resources. The site helped me and in turn I put it on my own resource page to help other widows. Keep up the great work - this site is needed!" – Mary Francis - Saint John, New Brunswick.
